A study conducted for the Food and Nutrition
Service, USDA

STUDY OBJECTIVES

The Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 2004 authorized use of Medicaid information for direct verification of eligibility for the National School Lunch Program. That legislation also requires USDA to determine the effectiveness of direct verification, and whether it can be conducted by most State agencies and LEAs.

With direct verification, LEAs may verify the eligibility of NSLP applicants without contacting households. Many LEAs directly verify students who apply on the basis of food stamp (FS) or TANF eligibility. Use of Medicaid data can further reduce the number of households that need to be contacted for NSLP verification.

Seven States are participating in this study of direct verification: Georgia, Indiana, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington, and Wisconsin. Data will be collected from State and local agencies in these States to help the Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) understand how direct verification can reduce the rate of nonresponse to verification requests.

YOUR ROLE IN THE STUDY

Your agency is one of 30 LEAs selected through scientific methods to represent agencies in your State. Your participation in the study is voluntary and important to ensure scientifically valid findings.

You are asked to provide copies of NSLP applications from households that did not respond to verification requests in 2006.

These applications will be matched with FS, TANF, and Medicaid data to determine whether they could have been directly verified.

DATA COLLECTION PROCEDURES

APPLICATIONS FOR NONRESPONDING HOUSEHOLDS

Please identify and photocopy all NSLP applications in your 2006 NSLP verification sample for which a complete household response was not received. This includes applications with no response, and applications for which households responded but did not provide sufficient information for verification.

In addition, please complete the transmittal label on the envelope marked "Confidential" by providing:

- Name, telephone number, and e-mail address of contact person for this study
- Number of sampled applications directly verified with Food Stamp data in 2006 (if applicable)
- Number of photocopied applications provided in the envelope
- Explanation if any nonrespondent application is not included in the envelope.

Please submit copies of nonrespondents' applications and transmittal information to Abt Associates Inc. by November 30, 2007.

NSLP applicant information is confidential, however, the law permits release of this information for FNS program evaluation. To ensure data security, this information may be transmitted only via FedEx with a signature requirement.

Place application data in an envelope marked "Confidential", complete the transmittal label, and use the enclosed FedEx transmittal envelope to submit by November 30, 2007.
