Information For Individuals Applying For A Transportation Identification Credential

The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) developed the Transportation Worker Identification Credential (TWIC™) Program in response to the Maritime Transportation Security Act. The Act requires use of a biometric identification credential by individuals who require access to secure areas of maritime facilities and vessels. Before issuing a TWIC, TSA must conduct a security assessment on the TWIC applicant. An applicant who, as a result of the assessment, poses a security threat, will not be issued a TWIC.

Each applicant for a TWIC must provide biographic information, identity documents, fingerprints, sit for a digital photograph, and pay the established TWIC fee. TSA will maintain an enrollment record to the FBI, as well as within the Department of Homeland Security. TSA will conduct appropriate terrorist threat, criminal history, and immigration checks can be performed. Results of the checks to determine if the person poses a security threat, and will notify the applicant of the results. When TSA determines that an applicant qualifies to receive a TWIC, a credential will be issued and sent to the enrollment center at which the applicant applied. The applicant will return to the enrollment center for issuance and activation of the TWIC. Possession of a TWIC does not guarantee access to secure areas because the owner/operator controls which individuals are granted unescorted access to secure areas or vessel. Rather, TWIC is a secure, verified credential that can be used in conjunction with the owner/operator's risk-based security program that is required in security regulations and procedures.
