i do not think this investigation of possible clinical trial workers is rigorous enough. i am not particularly saying this only about cancer investigation this comment applies to all clinical investigations. i do not think any clinical trial for a drug to be used in the united states should be done in any third world or asian country. all clinical trials for drugs to be used in the us should be tested in the us on people willing to test. it is clear that going so far away allows far more skullduggery, and criminal activity to take place that will make that drug entirely unsuitable for use in this country. the amount of criminal negligence that can take place when these clinical trials are so far removed from their place of sale is enormous. we also need far more release of documents on those clinical trials to the public. big pharma and big medicine have been making big money from giving the us public alot of fake drugs. we need to stop that now. we are all sick of being hornswoggled by big pharma and big medicine seeking big money. the situation with this is like wall street scamming and the sec. our federal agencies seem to be pushovers for those intent on criminal activities.
