

National Drug Threat Survey 2010

National Drug Intelligence Center
U.S. Department of Justice

Who is NDIC?

The National Drug Intelligence Center (NDIC) mission is to produce strategic domestic drug intelligence for the nation's counterdrug community and national, regional, and state drug threat assessments. It also provides real-time support to law enforcement and intelligence communities. It performs the last by conducting document and computer exploitation for materials associated with counterdrug and/or counterterrorism investigations.

What is SENTRY?

SENTRY is an Internet-based collection and dissemination system to identify new, primarily synthetic drug-related behaviors at an early stage, evaluate their likely importance, track their development, and share the data with authorized users in real-time. SENTRY focuses on synthetic drugs that are predominately produced via a chemical process, such as LSD (lysergic acid diethylamide), MDMA (3, 4-methylenedioxymethamphetamine, also known as ecstasy), and methamphetamine. As an early warning system, it also monitors prescription drugs, over-the-counter medications, botanical substances and extracts, and chemicals and products involved in the manufacturing of synthetic drugs.

What is the National Drug Threat Survey?

NDIC annually conducts the National Drug Threat Survey (NDTS) to collect primary data on the threat posed by various illicit drugs in the United States. It conducts a stratified random sample of nearly 3,500 state and local law enforcement agencies to gather national, regional, and state estimates of various aspects of drug trafficking activities including the threat posed by various drugs, the availability and production of illicit drugs, and the role of street gangs and outlaw motorcycle gangs in drug trafficking activity.

The NDTS has been conducted annually since 2000. A nationally representative sample was initiated in 2002 and state-level estimates were first derived in 2003. Annual NDTS response rates have been close to, or exceeded, 90 percent each year since the inception of the state-level sample. The response period of the 2010 NDTS will be from December 1, 2009 through January 31, 2010.

What is the NDIC Dynamic Mapping Initiative?

The NDIC collects data for its annual NDTS from state and local law enforcement agencies (LEA) in the United States. NDIC uses the information to produce national, regional, and state estimates of various aspects of drug trafficking activities. The link below accesses NDTS response data for the question "What drug poses the greatest threat to your area?"
