

Federal Communications Commission (FCC) E-rate Program Survey

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) is conducting an online survey regarding program recipients' current and potential future uses of E-rate funding. This survey will be used by the FCC to determine how to best address the educational and technological needs of schools and libraries in the National Broadband Plan and as the FCC makes policy decisions for the E-rate program.

This survey should take approximately 20 minutes and is voluntary. The FCC values your feedback and requests that you take the time to complete the survey in its entirety and, if necessary, consult with others within your school, school district, or library to obtain the necessary information to respond to the questions.

The survey is being hosted by Harris Interactive, an independent national marketing research firm, best known for "The Harris Poll". Your survey responses will not be released beyond the study team and your name and your school's, school district's or library's information will not appear in any written reports. Additionally, your name and your school's, school district's or library's information will not be associated with any response or comment you choose to make about the program. The survey data and findings will be reported in aggregate form only.

Please note that you must use the link that is provided for you in this email to access the survey. This survey can be completed in more than one session if you need additional time to answer some questions or have to consult with others. Do not share the survey link with others as each URL is unique. Also, please do not try to access the survey using anyone else's survey link.
