ABSTRACT:

The National Cancer Institute (NCI), in collaboration with our research partners – the NIH Clinical Center, The Johns Hopkins University and Georgetown University Hospital, is interested in leading a national effort to develop core competencies and curricula for undergraduate professional nurses in the area of clinical research and clinical trials. The NCI proposes conducting formative research to explore the thoughts and opinions of practicing nurses and individuals about needs regarding educating nurses in the area of clinical research and clinical trials at the undergraduate level. The research would involve in-depth interviews (IDIs) as well as an online focus group discussion using a methodology called “Advance Strategy Online (ASO) session of nurse educators, nurse executives, practicing nurses, and deans in nursing schools. The goal is to help inform NCI’s efforts to collaborate with key stakeholders (both internal and external) to develop clinical research and clinical trials core competencies and curricula guidelines for entry-level professional nursing practice.

GENERIC SUB-STUDY SUBMISSION – 0925-0046-04

DATE OF REQUEST: September 7, 2010

SUB AGENCY (I/C): NIH/NCI/OCE

TITLE OF SUB-STUDY: Genomics and Genetic Testing: Message Testing Research with Consumers and Advocates

GENERIC CLEARANCE UNDER OMB #0925-0046-04 EXP. DATE: 2/28/2013

TOTAL BURDEN APPROVED OVER 3 YEARS: 7050 hours

BURDEN APPROVED TO DATE: 1020 hours

BURDEN THIS REQUEST: 100 hours

ABSTRACT:

The NCI's Public Health Genomics Interest Group and Office of Communications and Education (OCE) have developed draft messages for the general public about personal genomics and genetic testing. The proposed message testing research with consumers and health advocates will allow NCI to better understand what messaging meets the information needs of and is of most interest to the general public, and will inform the refinement of messages and development of materials on the topics of personal genomics and genetic testing. The proposed methodologies for this data collection are focus groups and triads.
