FINE PRINT FOR TREASURY SECURITIES – BILLS AND NOTES

The security term(s) listed on the front as noncompetitive reinvestment options are based on anticipated Treasury securities offerings. However, the Secretary of the Treasury reserves the right to modify the terms and conditions of new securities, and to depart from the customary pattern of securities offerings at any time. Consult the official offering announcement for the exact terms and conditions that apply to the sale of the new security that you request. If the maturity date of your security does not coincide with the issue date of the new security, the par amount will be placed in a non-interest-bearing account for a period not to exceed five (5) days.

You may NOT request noncompetitive reinvestment into any term of a security listed on the front if you are also bidding competitively in the same auction. There are several additional restrictions to noncompetitive bidders that are provided in paragraph 356.12 (b) (2) of Treasury Circular No. 1-93 (CFR Part 356). 31 CFR, Part 356.34 provides for assessment of a penalty of 1% of the par amount of securities awarded in an auction if the bidder fails to pay for the securities in a timely manner.

REMEMBER — Treasury bills and notes are sold by auction. The price is determined after the auction. As a noncompetitive bidder, your price will be based on the highest rate or yield accepted from the competitive bids.

PAYMENT DUE NOTICE — You might get a Payment Due Notice if the new security sells at a premium and/or if accrued interest is due. If you receive a Payment Due Notice, please send your payment promptly. It's due upon receipt. You must pay any premium and/or accrued interest due before we can complete your reinvestment.

PREMIUM

If the new security sells for more than the par amount (if the price per $100 is $102.787, for instance) then you might owe a premium.

ACCRUED INTEREST

Accrued interest is the amount of interest a security earns before it's actually issued. A security starts earning interest on what's called the "dated date," or the established date for issuing that security. Normally, the dated date is the same as the issue date, but you might owe accrued interest if the new security is a reopening and/or if the new security's dated date is a non-business day.

Reopenings — A reinvestment option shown on the front of this form may be a reopening. A reopening is when we auction a previously issued security with the same maturity date and interest rate as the original, but with a different issue date (which creates a shorter overall term) and, usually, a different purchase price. While most are planned, Treasury occasionally has a "surprise" reopening if, at auction, a security sells at the same interest rate and the same interest period as a previously auctioned security. In this case, Treasury may reopen the original, not auction a new issue.

Example: You buy a 5-year note in May. In June, the U.S. Treasury reopens that 5-year note with the same maturity date and interest rate—just a month later. You buy another 5-year note in June. Consequently, the security you bought in May and the one you bought in June are basically the same security—except for the term and the purchase price. The differences: (1) you bought your second security one month after the original, so your second security's term is 4 years and 11 months instead of an even 5 years; and (2) you may pay more or less for the second security, because the price will be refigured at the second auction. If it's higher than par, you'll owe a premium plus the accrued interest for the first month.

The security issued in June was originally issued in May, but you bought it in June, so it already earned a month of interest since May. You're responsible for paying that one month's interest amount, so we can pay you a full six-month interest amount on the first semiannual interest date—which will be November (not December).

Dated Date is a Non-Business Day — A reinvestment option shown on the front of this form may have a dated date that does not fall on a business day. Accrued interest may be due if a security begins earning interest on a non-business day (weekend or holiday).
