Guide to Completing the Report of Physical Examination

The Physical Examination is one of the final pre-service requirements for individuals applying for Peace Corps service. Most Peace Corps countries have limited access to Western-trained health professionals, and medical resources are seldom as advanced, or as available, as they are in the United States. In many assignments a Volunteer may be geographically isolated and without easy access to medical care. It would not be in a Volunteer's best interest to be placed in an area where adequate support is not available for existing health problems or new health needs. In order for the Peace Corps to be able to make appropriate medical decisions regarding qualification and placement, it must have the most accurate and complete description of the applicant's current health status and the medical support that will be needed over the next three years.
