Parent or Guardian's Consent to Participate in NLTS 2012

On [DATE], I spoke with [TI NAME] on the telephone and agreed for my child and me to be in the NLTS 2012.

This is a voluntary research study. Its full name is the National Longitudinal Transition Study 2012. The Department of Education is paying for this study. Mathematica Policy Research, Inc. is carrying out the study. He or she is one of 18,000 middle and high school students across the United States in the study.

The purpose of the research is to see what helps students move from school to adulthood. People who run schools hope that all students will leave school prepared for the future. Data from this study will be used to improve the ways schools help students become productive adults.

All information I give to the researchers or they find out from others or from records about me or my child will be completely confidential. Only researchers can see this information. In accordance to federal law, any data files used to write reports will be for researcher use only and will fulfill privacy regulations and guidelines set by the National Center for Education Statistics. It will not be shared with others. Information about me or my child will be combined with information from other students and parents in the study. My name or my child's name will never be used. All reports will be written only in a summary form, and will not refer to any individual.

Being in the study means:

- An interviewer talked to me for about 30-35 minutes. The questions were about our family, experiences, and the support my child gets from school and other places. This interview was recorded for quality control purposes. I will be interviewed again in 2014. I will be paid $5 before and $15 after each interview I do.
- An interviewer also asked my child questions on the telephone for about 30 minutes. They talked about my child, school, and my child's plans for the future. This interview was recorded for quality control purposes. An interviewer will talk to my child again in 2014. I can help my child answer questions or answer for him or her. My child will get a $10 gift card each time he or she does an interview.
- If my child is about 16-18 years old in 2014, I agree that he or she may take a special test called an academic assessment. This test is for the study and will not count towards any classes in school. If he or she is in school, the test will take place during school. If not, the researchers will make an appointment for my child to take the test outside of school. The test will take between 15-45 minutes.
- In 2014, the researchers will also look at my child's school transcripts to see what courses he or she has taken.

- They will want to see how my child is doing in the future. They may want to combine data from the survey with other information such as data on college enrollment, financial aid for college, vocational rehabilitation agency services, or the Social Security Administration's records about jobs or benefits.
- The researchers will learn more about my child's school by asking the principal to do a web survey. If I agree, the researchers will also ask my child's mathematics or language arts teacher to do a web survey to learn more about my child's classes.
- If my child has an IEP and I agree, the researchers will ask the school staff member who knows the most about it to do two web surveys to learn about his or her IEP. One survey will be now and another will be two years from now.
 - Even if I consent for my child to participate in this study, my child must agree also. When my child turns 18 or no longer has a legal guardian, he or she must consent for himself or herself.
 - Being in this study will not benefit my child personally, but it will help the Department of Education plan better programs for youth as they leave high school.
 - There are no special risks to my child if he or she takes part in this study. If my child or I feel uncomfortable answering any of the interview questions we can stop without penalty. If my child or I change our minds about participating in the study, there will be no penalties for us.
 - My child or I can ask questions or drop out of the study at any time by calling Anne Ciemnecki at Mathematica. Her number is 866-764-7962. There is no charge for this call. If I have any questions about my child's or my rights as a research volunteer, I can call the New England IRB at 617-243-3924. This is the Institutional Review Board. They looked at this study to make sure my child's rights as a person in this study are protected.
 - There may be another phase of this study in the future and my child may be asked to participate again after 2014. We can decide to participate again or not at that time.¹

According to the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995, no persons are required to respond to a collection of information unless such collection displays a valid OMB control number. Public reporting burden for this collection of information is estimated to average 30 minutes per principal response, 30-35 minutes per parent, 30 minutes per each student, and 30 minutes per teacher for each of his or her selected students, and 30 additional minutes per each student aged 16-18 in 2014. This includes time for reviewing instructions, searching existing data sources, gathering and maintaining the data needed, and completing and reviewing the collection of information. The obligation to respond to this collection is voluntary. Send comments regarding the burden estimate or any other aspect of this collection of information, including suggestions for reducing this burden, to Yumiko Sekino at 555 New Jersey Ave NW, Washington DC, 20208 or email yumiko.sekino@ed.gov and reference OMB Control Number. Note: Please do not return the completed data forms to this address.
