

Periodic survey invitations

After completing the baseline survey, participants will receive a welcome/treatment email. Two weeks later, participants will receive an email to take the first of the periodic surveys. In the pilot, we will test two different email strategies for the periodic surveys:

1. Group 1 (control). Invitation to participate in the survey.
2. Group 2 (experimental). Invitation will include an option to schedule the survey if the person cannot do it right now. Research suggests that participants who schedule a time to do something are much more likely to follow through.

Participants will be randomized on scheduling/no scheduling at the beginning of the periodic surveys and will stay in the same groups for the duration of the study.

We will also test a variety of different FROM and SUBJECT lines. These will be randomized within each scheduling group.

Finally, we will use the periodic survey emails to reinforce the treatment groups.

SUBJECT LINE A: Time to take the next home buying survey
SUBJECT LINE B: Take your Home Buying Study survey now

Hi,

A couple of weeks ago, you began participating in a study on how people navigate the process of buying a home and finding a mortgage. As a thank you for your time, at the end of this study, you will receive a $[15/25 [deposit in your PayPal Account/Amazon e-giftcard/deposit to your reusable gift card].

Today, we have a few quick questions about how things have been going since we last talked to you. The survey should take between 5 and 15 minutes, depending on your responses.
