The HOS rules have become a labor law in disguise. Doctor's work extra-ordinarily long hours without regulation, and they too have lives at stake. Mandating for example, that a person be required to rest for 10 hours is too imposing on the individual and their sleep needs. You should find a way to focus on rules that reduce fatigue without micro-managing the drivers personal time. The HOS rules should get out of the business of making a labor law and focus on simpler, broader rules to combat fatigue.
