Explain:

Disaster activity can fluctuate from year to year, to include the type of peril in which the disaster was declared (i.e., tornado, flood, hurricane, etc.), the magnitude of the population and area affected, and affected population rate of insurance coverage; which thus causes a fluctuation in the average number of disaster applicants that seek assistance from FEMA. There has been no increase in the burden hours for the data collection instruments. Some data collection instruments (i.e., Request for Approval of Late Registration; Request for Continued Assistance, FEMA Form 010-0-12; Solicitud para Continuar la Asistencia de Vivienda Temporera, FEMA Form 010-0-12S; and Appeal for Program Decision) saw a decrease in the total number of respondents.

Data collection instruments (i.e., Request for Continued Assistance, FEMA Form 010-0-12; Solicitud para Continuar la Asistencia de Vivienda Temporera, FEMA Form 010-0-12S) have been updated to provide better instructions to the public regarding the completion of the forms and the necessity of the supporting documentation. As stated above, these minor changes have not increased the burden hours for the data collection instruments.
