Non-substantive changes to CATI script based on evaluation of initial phone interviews after launch of Rural Establishment Innovation Pilot Survey.

After the first full week of phone interviews and receipt of completed web surveys of the Rural Establishment Innovation Pilot Survey, the need for a small number of minor changes became apparent. Over this time 24 phone interviews were completed and 75 web surveys completed. The proposed changes and the reasons for those changes are summarized below. These changes only pertain to the CATI script for the remainder of the pilot survey data collection. These changes will likely be incorporated into the mail survey and web survey for the full study after the responses to these questions are analyzed.

In 2012 what percent of goods and services sold by your business were sold to individuals?

The question is seemingly simple and straightforward. In cognitive testing it did not raise concerns. In addition, the web respondents do not appear to have trouble answering the question. However, in phone interviews nearly all respondents have required clarification, often going into some detail about their customer base. Many would take more than one minute to answer this question with a couple extending beyond three minutes. Given the added burden and the limited value of the information elicited by this question it would be best to eliminate it for the pilot survey. We considered rewording the question but did not come up with any concise alternatives that remove ambiguity of the question. We will be able to analyze the value of this question more thoroughly from mail and web surveys and propose making our final determination on the fate of this question in the final pilot survey report.

In the current CATI script the retirement plan item precedes the employee ownership plan item. Some respondents regard the employee ownership plan as a retirement plan. This potential confusion was not identified in cognitive testing. From the completed surveys roughly 8 percent of establishments have an employee ownership plan. To avoid potential confusion it is proposed to place the retirement plan option after the employee ownership item as the former is more general than the latter, and provide guidance in interviewer notes that retirement plans include 401ks and pensions.

Q5 and Q5a were originally a single question separated as a result of cognitive testing. The original justification for including Q5 and Q5a toward the beginning of the survey was the questions' productiveness in the 1996 ERS Rural Manufacturing Survey and thus the desire to ensure completion, and the possibility that the question would serve as a useful gateway question to the rest of the survey. In cognitive testing this placement did not appear to produce any difficulties for respondents. However, after listening to numerous phone surveys both Q5 and Q5a appear to be presented too early in the phone conversation just as "vital statistics" of the business are being collected. Both questions fit much better later in the survey when location issues are discussed at length and demonstrated success in retaining the great majority of respondents to the end of the survey lessens the risk of item nonresponse.
