

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR
WASHINGTON

ORDER NO. 3332

Subject: Engaging the Next Generation

Sec. 1 Purpose. Engaging the next generation is essential to the Department of the Interior's (DOI) mission to protect America's natural resources and heritage, honor our cultures and tribal communities, and supply the energy to power our future. To bridge the growing disconnect between young people and the great outdoors, we seek to engage and involve the next generation in meaningful connections to nature through opportunities to play, learn, serve, and work on public lands. Our goals will be accomplished by meaningfully increasing our commitment to engaging young people in all aspects of our work and expanding public-private partnerships to benefit people, public lands, the economy, and the environment.

Through this Order, DOI will build upon the outstanding work and programs already operating in DOI bureaus at local offices and units around the country and pursue a comprehensive strategy to involve millions of young people to play, learn, serve, and work outdoors. The DOI will establish a framework and plan to coordinate its efforts and those across the government, including the 21st Century Conservation Service Corps (21CSC).

Sec. 2 Background. The DOI is the steward of more than one-fifth of our Nation's lands, which include thousands of miles of streams and rivers and the headwaters of many major watersheds, and is charged with protection of ecosystems, including fish, wildlife, plants, and their habitat. The DOI oversees the responsible development of over 20 percent of U.S. energy supplies and is the largest supplier and manager of water in the 17 western states. The DOI maintains a government-to-government relationship with 566 federally recognized tribes and provides services to more than 2 million American Indian and Alaska Native peoples. Our scientific work is critical to responding to natural hazards and disasters, as well as building a better understanding of the Earth's complex systems. The success of our work and our conservation vision relies on the involvement and ownership of all, most particularly the next generation of leaders, stewards, scientists, and champions who must be inspired to find their own connection with America's great outdoors and our natural, cultural, and historic resources.

Yet we know that too many young people today are disconnected from nature. The DOI has the ability and responsibility to change that, and involve the next generation in meaningful stewardship of our country's precious natural and cultural assets, strengthen tribal communities, and advance a landscape-level understanding of our resources. We must focus on reaching young people wherever they live – in our cities, suburbs, and rural areas. All young people should feel welcome on our public lands.

We will focus on our work with partners to leverage our resources and realize maximum efficiencies in our efforts. In addition, with nearly one-third of our workforce eligible for retirement in the next 5 years, developing a talent pipeline is critical to the future of DOI and its mission.

Local managers and employees in every part of the country have led the charge to expand our collective efforts to engage youth, and have developed long-term and successful partnerships with service corps, nonprofit organizations, large and small businesses, states, counties, cities, and diverse stakeholder groups. The DOI is well positioned to expand its work in engaging the next generation, as our bureaus collectively provide over 15,500 work opportunities, benefit from 317,000 volunteers, educate more than 4 million young people, and welcome 478 million visitors on our lands each year. The 21CSC provides an additional platform to expand our work with young people and veterans. It is important that we build upon our successes and empower individuals at every level of the organization to take the critical actions needed to ensure the stewardship of our Nation's public lands and continuity of our mission while also creating powerful and long-lasting connections to those lands in our Nation's young people.

Sec. 3 Authority. This Order is issued under the authority of Section 2 of Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1950 (64 Stat. 1262), as amended; the Take Pride in America Act, (16 U.S.C. §§ 4601 et seq.); the Public Lands Corps Act of 1993, (16 U.S.C. §§ 1721 et seq.); and the Youth Conservation Corps Act (16 U.S.C. §§ 1701 et seq.).

Sec. 4 Goals for Increasing Youth Engagement. This Order sets forth goals for increasing DOI's engagement with the next generation, empowers bureaus and offices to lead and implement a comprehensive strategy for meeting the goals, and outlines the accountability structure and implementation framework to achieve the goals. Through these efforts, DOI will provide leadership in ensuring that the next generation has maximum opportunity to play, learn, serve, and work in America's great outdoors, allowing generations to experience and enjoy well-stewarded, dynamic, and diverse public lands, which are critical to our history, health and well-being, the economy, clean water, and ecosystem health. The following goals are aimed at inspiring young people to play, learn, serve, and work on public lands.

a. Play. In an effort to connect more youth to public lands, DOI will develop or enhance outdoor recreation partnerships in a total of 50 cities over the next 4 years. Through these partnerships, we will create new, systemic opportunities for outdoor play for over 10 million young people. We will use the convening power of the Federal Government as well as the relationships developed through our efforts to enhance and improve urban parks, refuges, and waters to develop partnerships with tribal, state and local governments, education systems, non-profits, and the private sector.

b. Learn. Within 4 years, DOI will be providing educational opportunities to at least 10 million of the Nation's K-12 student population annually. We will leverage technology, including the recently launched National Park Service teacher portal, to bring our public lands to the classrooms and classrooms to our public lands.

c. Serve. Within 4 years, DOI will attain a million volunteers annually on public lands and in support of our mission. We will invest in volunteer management and coordination to ensure that anyone who has an interest in devoting their time and talents to public lands has an opportunity to serve. We will re-examine how we perform our existing work to increase the opportunities for volunteer engagement.

d. Work. The DOI will provide 100,000 work and training opportunities to young people and veterans over 4 years within our bureaus through youth corps and through public-private partnerships. To the extent authorized by law, we will call upon the private sector and philanthropic organizations to fund additional work and training opportunities that can be provided within DOI's mission and programs to provide pathways to employment for young people and veterans.
