SUBJECT: YouthBuild 48-Month Youth Survey Pretest Findings

A. Introduction

In preparation for the 48-month survey for the YouthBuild Evaluation, Mathematica Policy Research under subcontract to MDRC, conducted a pretest of three new series of questions for inclusion in the 48-month survey. The first series aims to capture attributes generally associated with one's character. The second two series of questions measure respondents' activities surrounding civic engagement, leadership, and their sense of responsibility to others such as their family or people in their community. The new questions that were the focus of this pretest are included in Appendix A.

The pretest was conducted in two rounds utilizing a mixed-method approach. All pretest interviews were conducted in person. The first round included a card-sort activity with debrief for the personal attributes question and cognitive interviews for the activities questions. For the second round, youth completed either interviewer-administered or self-administered questionnaires and then participated in a cognitive interview using a retrospective protocol for the entire series of questions. The pretest protocols are included in Appendices B and C.

There were four main objectives of the pretest: (1) to assess the consistency and accuracy with which respondents interpreted abstract concepts such as personal attributes; (2) to identify questions that seemed redundant with items already included on the survey; (3) to assess the best placement for the new questions in the overall survey; and (4) to assess the additional burden the new questions would place on respondents. This memo provides an overview of the pretest design and presents findings and recommendations based on those findings.

B. Pretest Methodology

Pretests were conducted in-person with a total of 18 former YouthBuild participants from YouthBuild Philadelphia and Great Falls YouthBuild in Patterson, NJ. Participants were given a $25 gift card for their participation after completion of the interviews. Trained Mathematica staff conducted all pretest interviews.

During the first round of interviews, we used a card-sorting activity to test the personal attributes questions (Q1 in Appendix A). The card-sorting method is useful when trying to discern categories or flesh out sets of questions that tap into a shared underlying concept or construct (Righi et al, 2012). The primary goal of the card sort activity was to help determine the relative consistency with which people interpret and group the 21 words in this battery when each item is looked at independently. In addition, we wanted to test respondents' understanding and interpretation of the question stem "Please indicate how the people you hang out with would say that each of the following describes you...". We used separate cognitive probes to assess youth's understanding of the phrase "people you hang out with" and how well those individuals would be able to judge the respondent's character. The round 1 protocol (Appendix B) provides further details of the card sort activity.

In round 1, the activities questions were tested using cognitive interviews. Similar to the 12-month pretest, we identified questions or terms that could be ambiguous or unclear. We then created specific probes for these questions. The cognitive interview protocol is included in the round 1 protocol (Appendix B).

Round 2 consisted of a mix of interviewer-administered interviews and self-administered questionnaires followed by a retrospective debriefing. The combination of interviewer- and self-administered modes allowed us to approximate CATI and web survey conditions, the ultimate modes in which these surveys will be administered. To assess the additional time need to answer the new questions, we embedded them into the questionnaire sections with two goals in mind: (1) including them where we felt they fit best substantively and (2) minimizing the number of sections we would have to change in order to implement the questions into the 48 month survey. The latter is important to minimizing reprogramming costs for the 48-month survey. The personal attributes questions were added to section G, which asks questions about Social and Emotional Development. The activities questions were added to section H, which asks about Identity Development.

C. FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Findings and recommendations based on the two rounds of pretests are documented below. They are organized by each series of questions.

1. Personal attributes battery.

The personal attributes questions originated from a formative evaluation of YouthBuild conducted by Ferguson and colleagues (Ferguson et al, 1996). At the end of one-on-one interviews, respondents were asked "If someone asked you to describe yourself, to say who you are, what would you say?" This was an open ended question and the responses were coded into the groups that were ultimately used for this pretest. All respondents in that study were YouthBuild participants. The battery of questions was adapted as presented in Appendix A.¹ Below we present the findings on the question stem and the constructs themselves.

Question stem:

“Please indicate how the people you hang out with would say that each of the following describes you. Would you say the following are “not at all like you,” “kind of like you” “like you” or “very much like you?”²

We asked respondents who they thought of when asked about “people you hang out with”. We found respondents consider many groups of people, including friends or associates, cousins, nieces and teachers, among others. To further understand how well these individuals would be able to judge the respondents’ character, we asked them to rate, on a 1-5 scale [1 meaning not at all, 5 being very well], how well that person would be able to judge their character. The average rating was 4.1 with responses ranging between 2 and 5.

In general, respondents struggled with this question. As noted above, there was little if any consistency across respondents in terms of who they considered “the people [they] hang out with.” There were also inconsistencies within individual respondents. For example, one respondent reported that he found himself thinking of different groups of people for different items and noted that he would answer the question differently depending upon who he had in mind as he responded. The lack of consistency both within and across respondents raises concerns about the reliability and validity of the data we would capture from this series of questions.

Recommendation: Eliminate the inconsistency and more closely approximate the original question wording by changing the stem to read, “For each of the following, please indicate how much you think the word describes you. Would you say “not at all like you,” “kind of like you,” “like you,” or “very much like you.”

Constructs:

We had hoped the card sort activity would confirm that items presented together belonged to a single generally recognized construct, but ultimately we found that word groupings were varied

¹ We were unable to find documentation of the rationale for changing from self-reference – that is, how you would describe yourself-- to how other people would describe you.

² This is the version of the question that we were given for testing purposes. For Round 1, we did not include the full question text in our testing efforts. For Round 2, we revised the question to read, “Would they say the following...” to ensure subject-pronoun agreement.

considerably across respondents. Respondents sorted the 21 words or phrases into between four and seven groups, with an average of five groups. For reference, there were nine groups in the original question. The limited number of groupings produced by respondents suggests that they may not understand all of the terms. The second round of pretesting was used to further assess respondents' understanding of the groupings of words in their original form.

Findings for each construct are summarized in table 1 below. In general, findings fell into one of three categories: (1) not all the terms fit together, (2) respondents felt they could be described by some of the terms in a series, but not all of them or (3) they did not understand all the words.

Recommendation: We have strong reservations about including this series of questions in the 48-month survey in its current form. In addition to the issues raised in the table, this series has a strong bias towards words or phrases that are common among YouthBuild programs.³ As a result, the treatment group is likely to respond differently to these questions than will those who did not participate in YouthBuild and do not have the same context for the terms, potentially leading to false impacts. Further this question only highlights positive attributes of the individual and is not balanced with potentially negative attributes one might self-identify.

Before adding this series to the 48-month survey, we recommend restructuring the questions based on our findings, including:

- changing the stem of the question
- simplifying the categories into single constructs that would be familiar to all respondents
- balancing the attributes to reflect both positive and negative attributes

If we make these changes, further pretesting is needed to determine whether the changes improve the clarity of this series of questions. It will be especially important to test with both program participants and non-participants. Revising and testing the series have implications for our timeline and budget. Further, the revised questions may no longer be comparable with those that were administered as part of Ferguson et al.'s original study. While we recommend retaining the original self-referent question stem, we note that it is unlikely that all of the individual items will be retained.

2. Activities questions

To pretest the 'activities' questions, first, we regrouped and reorganized them to be in substantively similar groups. In general, we didn't find major issues with these questions, but have a number of recommendations for streamlining and integrating them into the 48-month survey. We present question by question suggestions for changes in table 2 and general recommendations below that. The final version of these questions, including our recommended ordering of the questions, is included in Appendix D.

³ For example, when conducting the pretests, interviewers noted that several of the words in this series appeared on bulletin boards at the YouthBuild sites.

General Recommendation:

In addition to the question specific suggestions, we recommend the following updates to this series of questions.

- Reference period: There are several issues associated with identifying the appropriate reference period for these questions. Questions about helping others may happen frequently but have fairly low salience. Under these circumstances, a shorter reference period – for example, the past month – may yield more accurate information. In contrast, serving in leadership roles are likely to be low frequency/high salience events. To avoid missing important leadership experiences, it may be important to allow for a longer reference period such as in the past year. Best practices in survey methods suggest that limiting the number of reference periods in a survey and particularly within a section of a survey facilitates more accurate recall. When this is not possible, as may be the case with these questions, sequencing of items is important so that respondents move from one reference period to another in logical way. We recommend changing the sequence to allow for ease of recall and limiting the number of reference periods in this section of the survey.

MEMO TO: Cynthia Miller, MDRC
FROM: Lisbeth Goble, Lauren Maul, and Lisa Schwartz
DATE: 5/30/2014

- Response options: Initially these questions used a response scale that included vague quantifiers like “Always/Often/Sometimes/Never.” For most of the activities, this scale did not make sense and was confusing to respondents. One example where this confusion was particularly pronounced was when we asked about the frequency with which youth serve in certain leadership roles. For most questions, we suggest changing to a more discrete scale: “Not at all/A few times a month/A few times a week/Every day”. There are several questions, noted in table 2, where we suggest changing to a “yes or no” structure.
- Substantive reorganization: We suggest grouping questions together that are substantively related, for example, grouping all the leadership questions together. In addition, we suggest moving a few questions to sections other than Section H. These are noted in the table.

While these questions did not pose major issues during pretesting, we still have some reservations about including them for logistical reason. If we implement the changes we recommend, we will be changing more than the two sections we thought would be impacted. This will require more programmer and instrument testing time than we anticipated.

3. Timing and Respondent Burden

We administered sections G and H in their entirety in order to compare the timing of those sections to their timing on the 12 month survey. On the 12 month survey, we found that section G and H took just over 7 minutes when administered by phone. On the pretest, we found that the interviewer-administered survey took about 13 minutes, suggesting that the inclusion of these questions will add about six minutes to the survey administration time.

The 12 month survey was, on average, over 45 minutes in length (5 minutes longer than we anticipated), which is less than ideal. The inclusion of these new questions will increase the chances that we will experience break-offs and non-response. Further, these questions are included in sections that respondents found particularly challenging during the 12 month pretest. We have reservations about adding more to these already challenging sections.

In Person Interview Script:

Hi, my name is [name] and this is my coworker [name] from Mathematica Policy Research, a social research company based out of Princeton New Jersey. Thanks so much for being willing to help us out today.

As we go through the activities, you may notice that at some points I'm reading word for word from my notes. We just want to make sure that we are giving each person the same information. There will be plenty of time for us to talk through any questions you might have after we finish the activity.

As someone may have explained to you, we are currently testing a series of questions that will eventually be part of a larger survey and we want your help to figure out how to make the questions and answer categories clear and easy to understand. To do this we are going to ask you to do two different types of activities. You will be doing the first activity with me and then you will do a second activity with [insert name of partner]. All together the activities will take about 40 minutes of your time.

Please keep in mind that there are no right or wrong answers to any of the activities or questions we ask you. We really just want to find out as much as possible about what you are thinking, so don't hesitate to speak up whenever something is unclear, hard to answer, or doesn't seem to apply to you.

I will be recording the interview so that I can go back and listen to it later when I'm summarizing the results. While we are doing our activity, my partner will be observing us and timing our activities and taking notes, so that I can just focus on talking with you.

Everything that you tell us will be kept private. You don't have to answer any questions that make you feel uncomfortable.

Do you have any questions before we start?

Let's begin.

Please hit the record button on your digital voice recorder

PART I – CARD SORT ACTIVITY

A. Materials:

- Set of index cards with the words and phrases on them (each set should have 23 cards)
- Round 1: Pretest Protocol
- Paper clips (at least 10)
- Pen or pencils
- Tape recorder (and batteries)

While the lead interviewer introduces the activity, the partner should start filling this out:

Step 1: Give respondent instructions:

Here's how it works. In front of you is a stack of cards. Those cards represent words that might be used to describe you. I'd like you take the cards and try to sort them into groups that make sense to you.

If you don't understand the meaning of the word or phrase on the card, you can put them in a "Don't know" pile. If you think something doesn't belong or "fit" with any other words, you can make an "other" pile. At the end of this activity, I will ask you some questions about why you grouped certain cards together and what some of the words and phrases mean to you.

Step 2: Card sort debrief with respondent

While the respondent is sorting their cards, you or your partner should start filling out the Card Sort Results table on the next page making notes about the following things:

- Respondent ID. Enter an ID between R1 and R9, where the first pretest respondent in round one is R1 and the last pretest respondent in round one is R9.
- Lead/secondary interviewer names. Write down the name of the person leading the card sort activity and the name of the person observing the card sort activity and taking notes.
- Start and stop times for the card sort. How long does it take the respondent to complete the card sort task? Extremely long or short card sort times can be a sign that the respondent had difficulty understanding the task, the meaning of words on the individual cards, or was not taking the task seriously.
- Observation notes. As the respondent is conducting the sorting activity, please watch to see if there are non-verbal clues that any words or phrases are confusing. Make notes in the "General Notes" box in the Card Sort Results table.

Once the respondent has finished sorting the cards into piles you are going to want to ask them about the groups of cards they made. Some questions to ask respondents are listed below:

- I see that you have [X] groups, can you please tell me a little bit about why you grouped each of these together?
- If you had to name the group, what would you call it?
- Can you tell me any other words you would include in that group (words that aren't listed on the cards).
- Can you please tell me a little bit about the cards you didn't put into groups?

Step 3: Document the number of groups, the words in each group

In order to analyze patterns across respondents, we will want to rubber band the respondent's cards into the groups they formed and then put those groups of cards into an envelope and write the respondent ID on the envelope (R1 – R9).

We will later data enter these so that we can analyze the card sort data across respondents to identify patterns and underlying constructs.

Step 4: Follow-up on the stem to this question

Interviewer Note: The original question stem to this question was “Please indicate how the people you hang out with would say that each of the following describes you. Would you say the following are “not at all lot you”, “kind of like you”, “like you”, “very much like you”.

I just have a few more questions for you.

1. If I said the phrase “people you hang out with”, who would that include?
2. [Interviewer - For each person they ‘hang out with] – On a scale from 1 to 5 with 1 being not at all and 5 being really well, how well do you think that person could answer questions about your character?

PART II – OBSERVATIONAL DEBRIEF

Materials:

- Round 1: Pretest Protocol
- Pen or pencil
- Tape recorder (batteries)

Step 1: Explain the purpose of the activity

Next, I want to ask you a series of questions that will be part of a larger survey later.

Step 2: Start filling out the observational debrief notes table

Observational Debrief Notes

Step 3: Administer the survey questions and verbal probes (see next page)

Before we start, can you tell me if you have any children? There are a few questions that are specific to people with children, but I will skip those if they don't apply to you

INTERVIEWER NOTE: Note if they have a child. Certain questions will contain the check for if child=yes

These first questions are about activities you may have done in the past 12 months.

PT1. In the past year, how often have you done the following activities?

Would you say always, often, sometimes, or never?

	Always	Often	Sometimes	Never
a. Helped family members	1	2	3	4
b. Helped other members of the community	1	2	3	4

INTERVIEWER PROBES:

Can you tell me what types of helping activities you were thinking of when you answered this question?

[For each, if not 'never'] How many times did you help?

PT2. In the past year, how often have you done the following activities?

YOUTHBUILD RESPONDENT DEBRIEFING PROTOCOL: ROUND 2

YouthBuild Respondent Debriefing Protocol: Round 2

Materials:

- Debriefing protocols
- Questionnaires
 - 5 for SAQ
 - 5 to provide in-person interview respondents with a blank hard copy during debriefing
 - One for interviewer
- Digital recorders
- Pens and pencils for respondents
- Gift cards for respondents

Administer Survey:

Thank you for your time and willingness to help us out.

First, let me introduce myself and tell you a little bit about what we are going to be doing here today.

- My name is [name] and I'm from Mathematica Policy Research, Inc., a research company in Princeton New Jersey.
- You may notice that at some points I'm reading word for word from my notes. We just want to make sure that we are giving each person the same information. There will be plenty of time for us to talk through any questions you might have after we finish the activity.
- Today, we are asking for your help to test a few sections of a questionnaire that will eventually be given to a larger group of youth. Your input is very valuable, as it will help us identify questions that are not clear and address any concerns that you or other youth might have about the survey. Your feedback will be incorporated into the final version of the questionnaire. Ultimately, your input will help ensure that we collect the highest quality data.
- [For in-person interviews]: First, I am going to ask you several survey questions, and then I would like to get your feedback about those questions. This should take about 30 minutes. Do you have any questions before you begin?

I would like to record our discussion so that I can go back and listen to it later if I need to. Is that ok?

- [For PAPI]: Please complete these questions, and then I would like to get your feedback on them. This should take about 30 minutes. Do you have any questions before you begin?

- INTEVIEWER NOTES
 - Note the start and stop times on your questionnaire.
 - For PAPI: Please note if respondent appears to be having any noticeable difficulties while completing the survey. When interview has ended or respondent has completed the survey, enter stop time.

Debriefing Protocol:

Thank you for answering these questions. As I said before, I want to ask you some questions to get your feedback about the survey.

[For in-person respondents]: Here is a copy of the questions so that you can refer to any specific questions I ask you about]. If you have any other comments as we go through, please feel free to share.

[FOR PAPI respondents]: I would like to record our discussion so that I can go back and listen to it later if I need to. Is that ok?

INTERVIEWER: For each page/section you can start with the following stem. “On [page], [section], were there any questions that you found confusing or did not understand?”

- Were there any terms or words that you did not understand?
- Were there any questions you found especially difficult to answer?
