TITLE OF INFORMATION COLLECTION:

Interview Script for Visa Services Research

PURPOSE:

In November 2014, President Barack Obama laid out a series of improvements to the immigrant visa process, embodied in Executive Actions and other agency policy directives. One of these intended changes was making the experience of the “user” (defined for the purposes of this framework as the intending visa applicant, whether based in the United States or abroad) more seamless, transparent, and accountable. This implied a need to make the user experience more central to the design and implementation of existing service delivery systems and business processes.

The State Department and the Department of Homeland Security, alongside other stakeholder agencies, must present a series of recommendations about how to modernize the experience of applying for a visa. These recommendations are for internal management purposes, and are one small part of a much larger slate of agency recommendations.

While these agencies are well on their way to improving the technical systems and customer service mechanism with which applicants must interact in order to apply for a visa, there remains a need to understand directly the attitudes, behaviors, experiences, and aspirations of the users themselves.

The U.S. Digital Service was asked to perform this research in order to support the State Department and the Department of Homeland Security in developing informed and actionable recommendations to the President.

DESCRIPTION OF RESPONDENTS:

Although there are many different kinds of “users” in the visa application process, this study will focus primarily on intending or existing visa applicants, and secondarily on their third-party supports (lawyers, agents, family members, etc.). These are people who have experience with the visa application program.
