Below is a list of all the questions that could potentially be asked by the interviewer to the respondent. Because of the adaptive nature of the application, a respondent may be asked to respond to anywhere from 5 to 30 questions to assess the nature of their current functional status for physical and behavioral aspects. This application will take into account the person's previous response to choose the next question and number of remaining questions.

Introduction:

This study is a collaboration between the Social Security Administration and the National Institutes of Health to develop a new method of asking questions related to disability (i.e., computer adaptive tests) and new questions to ask about your daily physical and behavioral activities.

The functional assessment profile is intended to measure self-reported functioning in the areas of behavioral health. These questions will not be used in your application for benefits and your answers to these questions will not affect your current or any future application. It is up to you whether you want to answer these questions or not. You can skip any questions that you do not want to answer. Some of these questions may be similar to other questions you may have answered already or may come up during the application process. Is it okay if I ask you these additional questions?

Choose one response to these questions:
Strongly Agree, Agree, Disagree, Strongly Disagree, or Does not apply.
