

The Rocky Mountain spotted fever (RMSF) Rodeo Project is a trial pet health project happening in Poblado Miguel Aleman (PMA) in 2016, with approval from the PMA Council. PMA is teaming up with the University of Sonora Medical School, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), other partners for the project.

The RMSF Rodeo Project's goal is to have less people get RMSF by improving pet health. This project will focus on three main areas, #1 - tick control on dogs #2 - tick control around the home, and #3 – community education

Participating households in the project area will receive:

1. Free tick collars & other tick treatments for your dogs for the summer (timed and checked by RMSF Rodeo team members)
2. Free pest management treatments for your yard (timed and checked by RMSF Rodeo team members)
3. Educational materials provided by the RMSF Rodeo team during home visits

Registered participants must agree to:

1. Ensure tick products or collars, provided by the RMSF Rodeo team, are placed on dogs and remain in place for the duration of the project.
2. Allow RMSF Rodeo teams to apply pest management treatments around the home and in the yard.
3. Allow RMSF Rodeo teams to check tick levels on dogs during routine visits.
4. Consider participation in knowledge attitudes and practices surveys before and following the program activities.
