Recruitment Video Script

Video character: Young girl that looks around 17.

Script:

Where do you get your health information from? Think you have heard it all from Google, your friends, or your parents? Confused about the information you get from all these sources? This confusion gave birth to The Girl Power Project. The Girl Power Project is research study that will test new phone app designed to deliver health information to girls.

So, how can you become part of this project? All you have to do is click on the link below which will take you to the Girl Power Project homepage. Once you check if you are eligible to participate, you will fill out some basic information and complete a short survey on your phone. You will immediately be able to access the app, and you will receive text messages every day with health information and tips to boost your well-being. We will ask you to complete two additional surveys after 3 months and after 6 months to see how much you are learning from the app. Your information is completely confidential, that means we won't share it with anyone.

Your participation in the study is completely voluntary and there are no costs. Every time you complete a survey you will receive a $10 gift card. Although you won't benefit directly from this study, you will surely learn a lot of new and correct information. You will also be helping us develop an app that actually works to improve the health of girls like you. Oh, did I mention that the CDC, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is funding this study?

If these sounds exciting to you and you are interested, join now!
