HEAD: Small Businesses Needed for Benefits Study

TEXT:

Thank you for your interest in participating in the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) study on workplace financial well-being programs. Information Experts has partnered with CFPB to conduct this study.

What is it?

CFPB is studying small business's experiences with employee financial well-being benefit programs, their goals in helping employees improve financial well-being, and their needs and gaps in benefit tools and services. CFPB also wants to gather employers' opinions about a CFPB-developed tool to help them measure the effectiveness of their existing and planned financial well-being benefits. Click here for additional details on financial well-being in the workplace.

How is the study being conducted?

CFPB is hosting a series of meetings and focus groups in four cities around the country.

1. A CFPB representative will meet for approximately 60 minutes with a company manager or executive to discuss the company's financial well-being benefits program or its plans in implementing such a program.
2. The CFPB representative will then meet with 10 to 15 of the company's employees in a focus group to discuss their opinions about financial well-being programs and to review a financial well-being assessment tool CFPB has developed. A copy of the employee discussion questions will be provided to you advance.
3. At the completion of the focus group, each study participant will receive a $50 stipend to thank them for their participation. The focus group will take place at your business location. Information Experts will provide refreshments for this event.

What can my company do to help?

Your company can provide a manager (preferably someone in human resources or benefit management) to meet in person with CFPB's representative. You can also arrange for 10 to 15 of your employees to volunteer to meet together with the representative in a 60- to 90-minute focus group. The meeting and focus group will take place in your offices. The focus group can be held during lunch or after business hours and the meeting with the HR or benefits manager can be at their convenience.

Why should we support this study?

1. Your company can help CFPB continue its work to improve the future financial well-being of workers across America.
2. The CFPB representative will provide candid but anonymous, third-party summary insight into the focus group discussions with your employees.
3. Your company's use of the newly developed CFPB Financial Well-Being Scale will allow it to gain insight into how well its financial well-being programs are performing.

4. CFPB will provide a written report later this year that summarizes its findings with all the companies it meets. This report will provide valuable insights into the challenges and successes small businesses have with their financial well-being programs.
5. Each employee who volunteers to participate in the focus group and the company manager or executive who volunteers to meet with CFPB will receive a $50 Visa gift card.

What are the criteria to participate?

If your company meets all of the following criteria, please fill out the form below and click on the Submit button. Within one business day someone from Information Experts, a company CFPB has retained to manage this study, will get back to you to discuss your participation.

HEAD: Financial well-being at work

Financial education is central to the CFPB mission. Our strategy to increase people's financial literacy and financial capability includes providing tools and information to help people navigate their financial decisions, implementing collaborative initiatives with our partners to help us reach consumers, and undertaking foundational research to identify, highlight, and spread effective approaches to financial education.

This leads us to focus on financial education in the workplace, where people make some very important financial decisions. At work we may decide how much to save for retirement, whether and how to secure health and life insurance, and whether to set aside funds to meet child care and medical expenses through specialized savings accounts. As more employers give employees the ability to split their paychecks automatically into savings, investments, and checking accounts, the workplace is also helping us set aside money for college, a new car, or a rainy day.

Given this natural connection between the workplace and certain key financial decisions, some employers are already playing a critical educational role for their employees. The evidence is preliminary, but some of the initial research on financial education in the workplace already suggests that a financially capable workforce is more satisfied, more engaged, and more productive for their employers.

Forward-looking employers are already playing an important role in shaping a better future for their employees and our country. We intend this study to spark important discussions about how we can help American employers help improve their employees' financial security by developing the financial skills they need to build a better life for themselves and their families.

APPENDIX B: DRAFT EMPLOYER DISCUSSION GUIDE

Employer Discussion Guide for Workplace Financial Well-Being

Purpose:

To determine employers' experiences with financial well-being programs for employees, their goals in helping employees improve financial well-being, and their needs and gaps in tools and services offered. Additionally, examine whether and how to provide employers the CFPB Financial Well-Being Scale as a way to measure the efficacy of existing and planned offerings.

Introductory Statement to Employer Representative to Frame the Discussion:

"Because working employees not only receive a paycheck but make some very important financial decisions at work, a growing number of companies provide financial well-being programs or financial wellness programs to their employees to help them make better informed decisions about their finances. When I say 'financial well-being programs or financial wellness programs,' I'm referring to programs that are aimed at boosting employees' knowledge, skills and confidence in matters such as handling debit and credit, making wise investment decisions, mitigating risk through insurance, and planning for taxes and retirement. These programs can be delivered as webinars, brown-bag lunches, workshops, videos, websites, and printed collateral, etc."

"With this as a background, I would like to discuss your company's opinions about this topic, its experiences with financial well-being programs, its goals in helping employees improve financial well-being, their needs, and any gaps in tools and services that you offer."

The information you provide through your responses to Independent Experts will assist the study sponsor, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau ("CFPB"), understand how to improve workplace financial wellbeing and develop effective financial wellbeing tools. The CFPB will not obtain or access any directly identifying information about screened participants. The agency will only obtain, and access, de-identified results and aggregated analyses of those results.

Participation in this study is voluntary. You may withdraw from participation at any time.

Experiences with Financial Well-Being Programs

1. Does your company provide your employees retirement benefits such as 401k, 403b, SEP, etc.?
2. What role, if any, does your company currently have in providing financial wellness or well-being programs?
3. Has your company investigated the overall level of employee financial wellness or well-being and how it impacts the company? If "yes," what were the findings?
4. Describe any financial programs your company has implemented to improve its employees' financial well-being and what impact they have had on the company and the employees.
5. What portion of your company's employees do you estimate participate in its financial well-being program?
6. What issues, barriers, or challenges has your company encountered when considering, implementing, or continuing a financial well-being program?

Financial Well-Being Program Goals

6. What goals does your company hope to achieve by providing its employees with a financial well-being program?
7. What metrics does your company use to measure the success of your financial well-being program?

Needs and Gaps

8. What types of financial well-being support do employees request, or have you observed they need?
9. Would your company utilize employee-focused tools, resources, and messages from the CFPB to support its financial well-being efforts?
10. If your company would use tools, resources and messages from CFPB, how would rate the following:
Paper-based materials or PDFs:
1- Would not use at all
2- Might use
3- Would use

Web-based trainings:
1- Would not use at all
2- Might use
3- Would use

Short videos:
1- Would not use at all
2- Might use
3- Would use

Face-to-face meetings:
1- Would not use at all
2- Might use
3- Would use
11. How else might CFPB support your company in offering financial well-being programs to employees or communicate the benefits of using employer-provided financial well-being programs?

CFPB Financial Well-Being Scale

Introductory Script for Interviewer for the set of questions that follow:

“After a rigorous research effort to develop a definition of financial well-being, the CFPB developed and tested a set of questions – a “scale” – to measure financial well-being.

(Hand the Standard Version of the Questionnaire to the interviewee.)

“This scale makes it possible to compare different people’s scores directly, to see how an individual’s financial well-being changes over time, and to measure the effectiveness of a financial well-being program.

“Once a respondent has completed the questionnaire, there is a separate worksheet to determine their Financial Well-Being Scale score.

“Please spend a few minutes reviewing it, then I have some questions.”

12. Please discuss why you would or would not use this scale to measure your employees’ financial well-being.
13. How do you think your employees would react to being asked to fill out this questionnaire?
14. What would be the best way for CFPB to approach your company about using this scale?

APPENDIX C DRAFT EMPLOYEE DISCUSSION GUIDE

Focus Group Discussion Guide for Workplace Financial Well-Being

Purpose:

To discuss employees' opinions about their company's financial well-being programs and to review the CFPB Financial Well-Being Scale.

Introduction:

"Because employees make some very important financial decisions at work, a growing number of companies provide financial wellness or well-being programs to their employees to help them make better informed decisions about handling debit and credit, making wise investment decisions, mitigating risk through insurance, and planning for taxes and retirement. These programs can be delivered as webinars, brown-bags, workshops, videos, websites, and printed collateral, etc.

"With that as background, I am here today to discuss your opinions about company-sponsored financial wellness or well-being programs."
