I'm calling about a study called the National Child Support Employment Demonstration Project, or CSPED, which is looking at how programs and services help noncustodial parents meet their child support obligations and build better relationships with their children. You agreed to become part of the study [when you applied to the [GRANTEE PROGRAM] program] about a year ago. I am calling you today in order to update the information you provided to us at that time and to ask some new questions. You may have recently received a letter about this. We will send you a $25 gift card for completing the interview.

Is now a good time to start?

i5_intro. The interview will take about 45 minutes. Your participation is very important and will help us understand if services for noncustodial parents help families and how they can be improved, but it is up to you whether you want to complete the survey. Whether or not you complete it will not affect any services or benefits you receive now or in the future. During the survey, you may choose not to answer any questions that I ask.

Your answers will be kept private to the extent allowed by federal law. The information you provide will be combined with information provided by others who also complete the survey. Nothing will be said about you as an individual in any reports about the study. While there are no direct benefits to participating, the results of this study will be used to improve the kinds of services offered to noncustodial parents like you.

This interview may be recorded so my supervisor can make sure that I asked the questions correctly. These recordings will be destroyed when the study is completed.
