

Story L

Some pill bottles tip over (on their own) and pills spill out on the counter.

NARRATOR: Unused prescription opioid pain medicines can spell many things.

The spilled pills rearrange themselves to spell “RISK.”

NARRATOR: Risk, if they’re taken by someone they weren’t prescribed for.

The spilled pills rearrange themselves to spell "ADDICTION."

NARRATOR: Addiction, which can change the way your brain works.

The spilled pills rearrange themselves to spell "OVERDOSE."

NARRATOR: And overdose if they're not taken as directed.

NARRATOR: They may be hiding in your home. In bathrooms, kitchens,

NARRATOR: or anywhere.

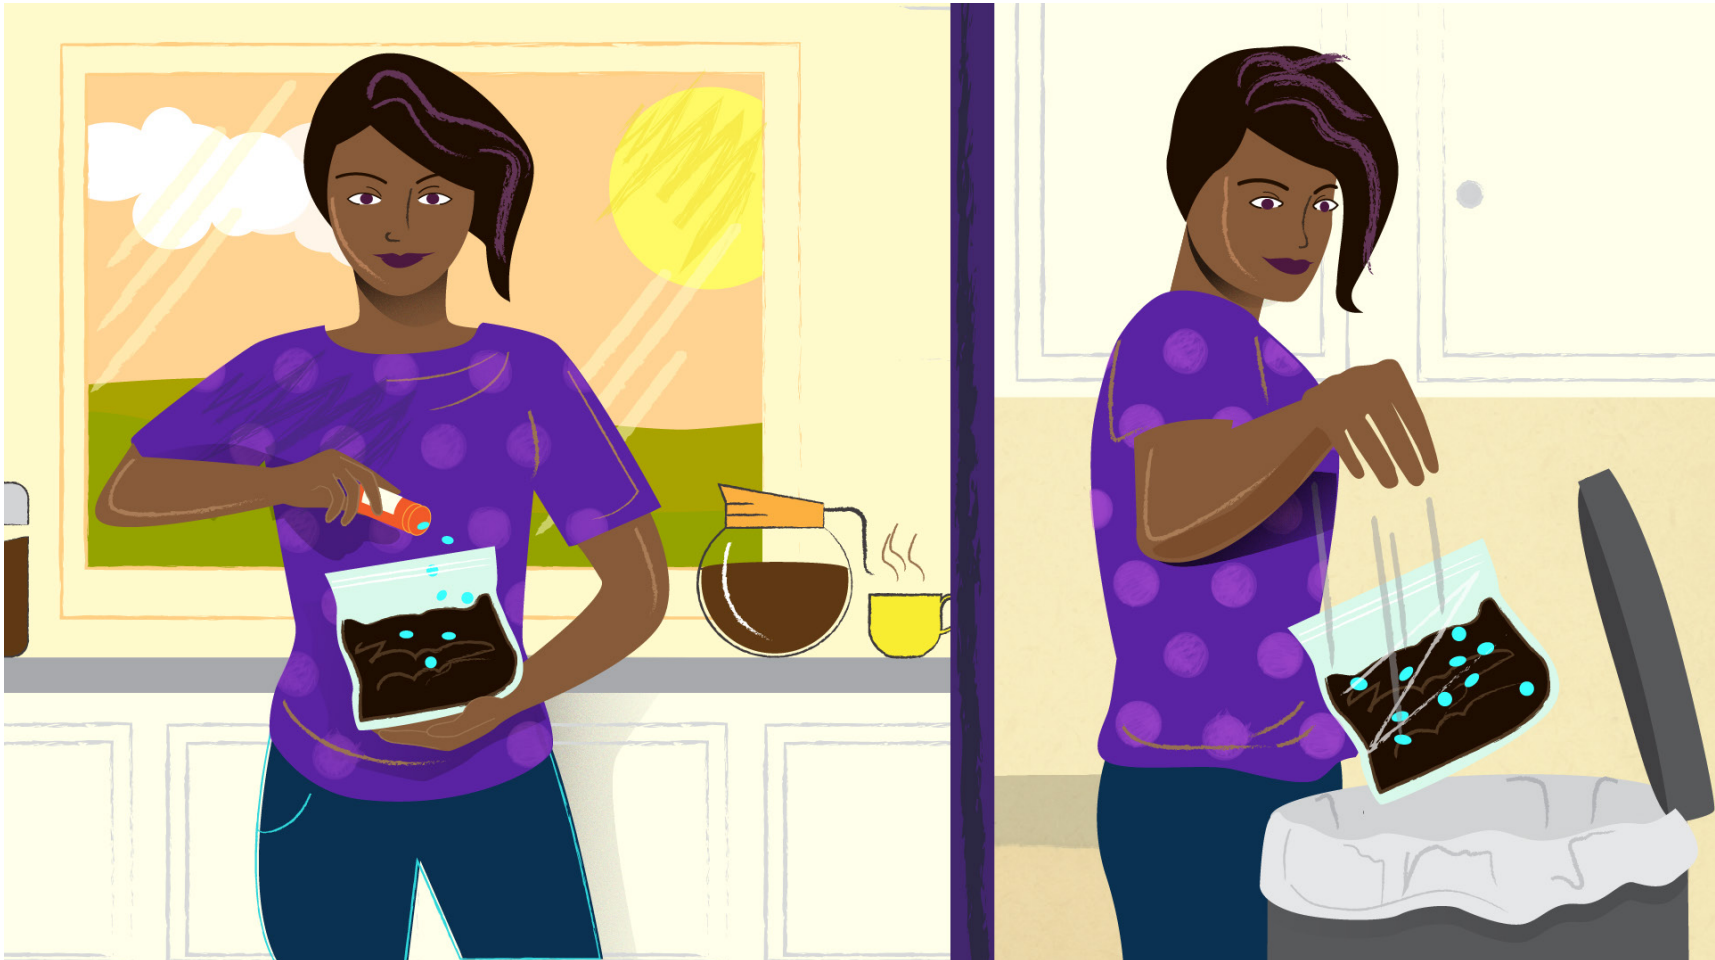

NARRATOR: Why put your family at risk? Safely dispose of opioids before they can do harm.

NARRATOR: The best thing is to find a drug take-back option, such as medicine drop-off boxes, mail back programs, or home disposal products.

NARRATOR: If there isn't a take-back location near you, check the FDA's Flush List. Medicines on the flush list may be especially dangerous if they are used by children, pets, or others in your home.

NARRATOR: No take-back location nearby, and your medicine isn't on the Flush List? You can dispose of it in the trash.
