Pacific Northwest Bumble Bee Symposium Questionnaire

The Pacific Northwest (PNW) is home to at least 27 species of bumble bee – more than half of all bumble bees native to North America. The PNW holds the historic range of several of the species that are currently in ESA review (Franklin’s, Western, Suckley’s) and others of conservation concern (Morrison’s, others). Some coordinated, landscape-scale conservation efforts are underway (the Oregon Bee Atlas, the PNW Bumble Bee Atlas, and others), but much work remains to be done and significant research opportunities exist. This symposium aims to gather Bumble Bee conservationists from different organizations in the Pacific Northwest to discuss Bumble Bee conservation, the projects being conducted, and the research that still needs to be done. Please fill out the following survey to help us organize the symposium and to cater to potential attendees.

FWS requests this information under authority EO 12862 and 13571. Participation is voluntary. OMB Control No. 1090-0011, Expires 10/31/2021
