Based on the information you have already provided, the following information is also necessary:

Has either parent had a residence in the United States at any time prior to the child's birth?

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act, the term "residence" means the place of general abode; the place of general abode of a person means his principal, actual dwelling place in fact, without regard to intent.

You must submit evidence that one U.S. citizen parent had a residence in the United States prior to the birth of the child at the in-person interview portion of the CRBA application process. Evidence of such prior residence may include, but is not limited to, the following:

- Utility bills

- Employment records
- School records (particularly elementary, high school)
- Pay checks
- Driver's license
- Gym membership
- Sworn statements at interview or in affidavit form
