IP Address Information

The federal Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE) requires a public Internet Protocol (IP) address from external partners to allow secure access to the Child Support Portal. OCSE independently verifies the IP address and organization name with the American Registry for Internet Numbers (ARIN), a regional internet registry for the United States. For more information, visit the ARIN website.

Enter the public IP addresses your organization uses to access the internet. In most cases, the IP address is your company's internet proxy server or the public IP address of the computer used to access OCSE's Child Support Portal. To locate your public IP address, search on the internet for "What Is My Public IP Address." You must verify the addresses with your network administrator.

By completing this section, you certify your organization holds exclusive use of the static IP addresses assigned by an Internet Service Provider vendor. If the static IP address assigned to your organization changes, you must contact the Portal Help Desk.

(Example: Comcast, AT&T, or Verizon. Enter your company name if you own your IP address and it is verifiable on ARIN website.)
