

President-reject Trump claims that he is a very stable genius and that Biden is senile. But in Trump's leaked phone call to Georgia's secretary of state, he sounds like a confused, babbling twit. First he said that 300 pounds of ballots were shredded. Then 3000. He also noted that the alleged shredding "may or may not be true" and referred to it as a "rumor." But when he was told that no ballots were shredded, suddenly it became a fact. Trump: "they are shredding ballots, Ryan. I'm just telling you, Ryan. They're shredding ballots."

And the very stable moron couldn't keep track of how many votes he wanted Secretary Raffensperger to "find" for him. At various points he asked for 11,780 votes, for 11,000 votes, for "11,000-plus votes," for 12,000 votes and "less than 2,000 votes."

But mostly Trump couldn't stay on topic, even when his team (Mark Meadows, Cleta Mitchell and Kurt Hilbert) tried to pull him back from the abyss. In fact he couldn't resist arguing with his own people:

"But, Cleta, even before you do that..."

"Cleta, a lot of it you don't need to be shared."

"Okay, Cleta, I'm not asking you, Cleta..."

"And so we don't really have to, Mark..."

But hey, don't take my word for it. The full audio and transcript of Trump's call are online. And as with Sarah Palin's rants, comedians can get laughs just by quoting Trump verbatim.