The program will feature lectures, seminars, and small group discussions on research relevant to minority health and health disparities. Lectures will include clinical and translational research methods as well as advanced concepts for the design and implementation of clinical research interventions. It will also include sessions with NIH scientific staff engaged in related health disparities research across the various Institutes and Centers.

The selection of targeted respondents

1. Do you have a customer list or something similar that defines the universe of potential respondents and do you have a sampling plan for selecting from this universe?
[] Yes [X] No

If the answer is yes, please provide a description of both below (or attach the sampling plan)? If the answer is no, please provide a description of how you plan to identify your potential group of respondents and how you will select them?

- Respondents will be identified by announcing HDRI via the IC's website, IC's Listserv, and the IC's social media pages. Interested respondents will submit a completed HDRI application.
- Applications are rated based on the professional experience/educational background, the essay, and the letters of recommendation. Each application will be reviewed independently for its own merit and is not compared to others.
- Reviewers only have access to the applications assigned to them for review. Each application will be assigned two reviewers. In order to maintain the integrity and confidentiality of the review process reviewers do not discuss assigned applications with anyone.
- Once a score has been submitted it cannot be modified. The scores for each applicant will be automatically provided through an online system. The second level review team will then rank and conduct the final selection, ensuring diversity and appropriate balance of the final accepted candidates.
- Selection criteria will focus on promising candidates with the highest potential for the HDRI and who, with the benefit of this experience, are the most likely to contribute substantially to their academic, organizational or professional fields through teaching, research, professional practice, or policy.
