How can the Food Program, also known as the Child and Adult Food Care Program (CACFP), better support you and family child care providers like you?

This study is sponsored by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food and Nutrition Service.

Why is the USDA doing this survey?

As you know, many families depend on family child care homes for affordable, quality child care. The Food Program, also known as the Child and Adult Care Food Program (CACFP), plays a significant role in supporting the health and wellness of children by reimbursing child care providers for nutritious meals served to children in their care. However, many family child care providers have left the Food Program over the last two decades. This survey seeks to understand family child care providers' experiences with the Food Program and gather recommendations to improve provider participation in it.

What questions will you ask me?

The survey asks questions about:

- Current and previous Food Program participation;
- Experiences with the Food Program; and
- How the Food Program can better support family child care providers.

How was I selected?

You, along with about 5,300 others, were randomly selected from a list of family child care home providers who participated in the Food Program at any point since 2019.

Why should I participate?

As a selected participant, you represent other family child care home providers like you. Your answers will help improve the Food Program for all family child care providers.

Do I have to participate?

Participation in the study is voluntary. Providers are strongly encouraged to participate per Section 28 of the National School Lunch Act, which states that institutions participating in child nutrition programs authorized under the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 are required to cooperate with the USDA and contractors conducting evaluation and research. If you do decide to participate, you can skip any questions you do not want to answer. The decision to participate will not affect any USDA benefits you receive now or in the future.

What's in it for me?

You will receive $40 after we receive your survey. Your participation will also help improve the Food Program for family child care providers like you.
