

Introduction to Draft Survey Construction

The initial draft Health Center Workforce Survey was developed based on an extensive literature review conducted as one of the deliverables for this contract (Literature Review Summary) and inputs from our initial Technical Advisory Panel meeting. The literature review was structured around a Mayo Clinic framework of factors influencing burnout and job satisfaction, which were organized into seven broad groups of drivers of burnout (Workload, Control & Flexibility, Social Support, Work-Life Integration, Organizational/Cultural Values, Efficiency & Resources, and Meaning in Work) (Figure 1). Although the Mayo Clinic framework listed examples of drivers within each major grouping, John Snow Inc. staff supplemented and modified the list of workplace factors based on our conceptual understanding of important determinants and consequences of burnout and job satisfaction within the Health Center program environment (Figure 2). It was this full list of workplace factors that provided the focus for the literature search (Figure 3). The primary objectives of the literature search were to confirm that (a) the workplace factors indeed were supported by research findings showing there was a relationship for each with either burnout or job satisfaction and (b) to also identify questionnaire measurement tools for the workplace factors that were used in these research studies (see Literature Review Summary).

JSI then compiled these measurement tools for consideration, often with several alternative tools available for each workplace factor. A subgroup of our project team then worked systematically over many sessions to choose the questions to include in the initial draft survey. In selecting the questions to measure each workplace factor, we kept in mind two objectives: (a) in order to keep the length of the total survey reasonable, the number of questions selected to measure an individual workplace factor should be relatively few; and (b) the wording of the questions should be applicable to Health Center staff across occupations (rather than hospital settings or limited to physicians for instance). The team chose a subset of questions that succinctly met the definition of a workplace factor as described in the literature review. In some instances, the team made slight wording or phrasing changes to ensure relevance to health center employees and consistency of perspective. Also, for some workplace factors, the team included questions from multiple measures. One final note on the construction of the survey, we arranged the survey into major sections and sequenced workplace factors within these sections in a way that made sense even though they were different from the Mayo Clinic's major groupings of workplace factors.

Based on feedback from 73 Listening Session participants representing a variety of occupations from different types of Health Centers across the country, JSI revised a second draft of this survey. Feedback from the Technical Advisory Panel members and HRSA staff contributed towards the third and fourth drafts. The current draft (version 5.0) was further informed by cognitive interviews conducted with a diverse pool of 60 health center staff who had completed the survey. A final draft of the survey will be prepared after pilot testing of the current version with approximately 400 health center employees from across all HRSA-funded health centers.

Summary of Major Changes

- 1 Organized the survey headings, subheadings, and flow of questions.
In the Literature Review Summary, JSI categorized workplace factors under the Mayo Clinic’s “Driver dimensions” of burnout (Figure 1). In draft 1, JSI re-categorized the workplace factors under new headings that transition from the individual, interpersonal, and organizational level. Some workplace factors merged into the same subheading or separated into distinct subheadings.
- 2 Added, deleted, revised, and reorganized questions based on feedback from the Listening Session participants.
Added questions or response options where the Listening Session participants noted missing concepts. Removed one question after reviewing whether the concept had been encompassed in other existing questions. Revised questions that participants found unclear or lengthy. Merged related questions into the same subheading.
- 3 Updated survey headings, added and deleted questions, revised response categories, and refined the question language based on TAP and HRSA feedback.
Upon HRSA’s suggestion, JSI reviewed the 2019 Federal Employment Viewpoint Survey (EVS) to compare the survey’s organization and workplace factors. Altered survey headings based on the EVS and reorganized existing subheadings. Added an introduction to the demographics section based on HRSA’s feedback. Added questions based on TAP/HRSA’s comments as well as added EVS questions that were not already included in the survey. Deleted questions that were redundant. Revised response categories to meet HRSA’s feedback, match the existing agree-disagree scale, and offer participants an option to not disclose their demographic data. Revised some questions for clarity and consistency.
- 4 Revised questions based on HRSA’s feedback.
Bullying, discrimination, and abuse questions were removed from the survey. Minor revisions to questions for clarity and consistency.
- 5 Revised, deleted, and reorganized questions based on feedback from the Cognitive Interview participants.
Reworded and simplified job classification questions. Added additional job classification questions to record respondents with multiple jobs, director roles, and those currently working towards credentialing or certification. Separated race/ethnicity demographic question into two questions. Removed questions that were redundant or already encompassed by other questions. Reorganized questions and subheadings to better reflect corresponding workplace factors. Clarified and simplified questions with minor edits. Revised response categories based on Cognitive Interview participants feedback on missing options. Added or revised section introductions given participant feedback about confidentiality concerns.
- 6 Revised and deleted questions based on feedback from HRSA.
Revised EMR/EHR questions to better assess burnout and not satisfaction with the operating system. Deleted sensitive moral distress questions.
