About pilot testing

By submitting this form, you are expressing your program’s interest in pilot testing the study’s toolkit of resources, “Elevating Family Input in TANF and Child Support Programs: Resources for Program Staff, Leaders, and Families.”

Piloting testing includes:

- Meeting with study team coaches at least monthly over the 12-month pilot testing period.
- Sharing the progress, successes, and challenges of your program improvement effort with study team coaches.
- Providing feedback to the study team about the toolkit of resources, through a monthly survey, interviews at the 6- and 12-month points of pilot testing, and a focus group a few months after the pilot testing period ends.

Selection

The study team will review all expressions of interest and may follow up with you to learn more about your program and interest in participating and to share more details about the pilot.

The study team will select eight programs to participate, ensuring a diversity of program types, locations, experience engaging families for their feedback, and areas for improvement. The study aims to include four TANF/Tribal TANF programs and four child support/Tribal child support programs. The study will also identify two TANF/Tribal TANF programs and two child support/Tribal child support programs to serve as alternate pilot sites, which may be invited to participate if a selected site becomes unable to continue the pilot. The study team will contact all programs that express interest to invite them to participate in the study, to invite them to serve as an alternate, or to notify them that they have not been selected.

We appreciate your interest in the Family Input Study!
