1	USCIS-2023-0004-0094	I am an immigration attorney with 30 years of experience. The current USCIS I-134A process was designed to exclude the assistance of attorneys who do not receive notices and cannot communicate with the agency. Attorneys assist USCIS by completing the application properly and will the correct supporting documents. The biggest problem with the program is that no one seems to be receiving parole. I understand that USCIS has received a large number of applications, but to take application out of order and not providing processing times, people are very disheartened. I would suggest that USCIS provide better instructions so that people know before beginning the application process what documents and information they need. In addition, attorneys should be able to access client USCIS account without needing to get a verification code from the client. Clients are not always available when the attorney has time to complete the application. I applaud DHS attempting to assist individuals from the countries, but the program doesn't work efficiently and the lack of transparency will not reduce numbers on the border clamoring to enter.	Response: USCIS will not amend the proposed form based on the information in this comment. Individuals interested in being a supporter may access frequently asked questions on the USCIS website, which include questions about the required evidence and documentation that potential supporters must submit with their Form I-134A. Individuals who are filing a Form I-134A may also start filling out the form online and if they are not ready to submit their form can save their progress, and return to continue working on the form if they need time to obtain additional information or documents to upload. USCIS is making no changes to the form or instructions as a result of this comment.

2	USCIS-2023-0004-0095	When HUD allows competition between discretionary services and statutory funding for uniform relocation, the outcome is permanent involuntary displacement, obstruction of justice and enforced homeless case management. So now I have to be transported 100 miles away to receive financial counseling and homeless case management at Flood Ministries to be eligible for any type of housing. AFTER being displaced from my home and job without notice. Explain how this is not human trafficking?	Response: The requirements for HUD housing programs are not related to the USCIS Form I-134A request to be a supporter, USCIS is making no changes to the form or instructions as a result of this comment.
