TITLE OF INFORMATION COLLECTION: User feedback revised Office of Climate Change and Health Equity website

PURPOSE: The HHS Office of Climate Change and Health Equity is completing revamping and existing website designed to provide climate resilience and emergency preparedness information to the health sector. The purpose of collecting feedback from users of new website is to better understand whether users find the website to be easy to use, and whether the information provided by the website is helpful for health systems, hospital and local public health organizations. The purpose of the tool is to provide users with tools and information in preparing for and responding to the health impacts of climate change and extreme weather events.

DESCRIPTION OF RESPONDENTS: The current website is not heavily used and we are hoping the revision will be more useful. Currently, we are aware of limited number of health systems who have used this site so far. Targeted respondents will be medical professionals and administrators in the US health system and national organizations that support medical professionals and the health system. Individuals and organizations receiving this information will be able to use it to anticipate climate change and extreme weather events and improve the function of their health care organization to respond to and mitigate the impact of climate change. Respondents will be asked to walk through the website, complete a couple of assigned tasks to let us know if the navigation makes sense and give an overall sense of their experience.
