

Author Full Name : AnonymousReceived Date : 01/14/2025 12:19 PMComments Received :

Good Morning,

My life changed in 2013 when I was T-boned by a new driver. My life hasn't improved in the last few years and now have fear of not getting my medicine that my doctor wants me to take. I was a Nurse but I was unable to do my job because of the accident. I see my doctor every 3 weeks. It has been an a year full of anxiety and hopelessness. I try to get my medications and they are unavailable or on back order. The pharmacy says talk to your Dr. I speak with my Dr. He wants me to be able to have and take what he prescribes. I have been going to my Dr. every 3 weeks for the last 10 years. It fuels my anxiety and has ruined my holidays because I may not have my medications and may go through severe withdrawals. I believe it is an over reach and step out of bounds for CDC,FDA, DEA and insurance company's being so involved with your personal health. I am safe with my medication I have never used more than prescribed or Overdosed on any medications. I am in pain and different doctors that have read my chart know that what I have going on is very painful and have said it is very painful. I want to feel like I matter and pain patients matter and are able to get the proper pain management. When I was a nurse pain was a vital sign and it seams pain isn't being addressed for many people. Thank you for your time and listening to my concerns.

Regards,

Anonymous pain patient