We are the office that makes disability decisions for the Social Security Administration (SSA). We are writing to you because we need more medical information about your condition(s). We are asking you to attend a [mental or speech and language] consultative examination so that we can obtain that information.

You have the option to attend a telehealth consultative examination. A telehealth consultative examination is conducted over the internet using video technology that would allow you and the provider to see and talk with each other. A telehealth consultative examination would allow you to attend the appointment from your home or other private location.

What You Need to Attend

If you attend a telehealth consultative examination, you will need to use a smartphone, tablet, laptop, or desktop computer that has a camera, microphone, and reliable internet connection. (For a speech and language examination: you will need to use a laptop, desktop computer, or tablet with diagonal screen display of at least 9.7 inches that has a camera, microphone, and reliable internet connection.)

When attending a telehealth consultative examination, you must present a valid, unexpired government-issued photo identification (ID) over the video connection. You may present ID documents, such as a United States (U.S.) State-issued driver's license, U.S. State-issued ID card, U.S. passport, U.S. military ID, or U.S. tribal ID.

What You Need to Know

Before you decide whether you agree to attend a telehealth consultative examination, we want to make sure you know that the information technology used for your exam will not be owned by SSA. Also, while the providers who perform consultative examinations for us are required to use online services that meet certain privacy and security requirements, there are privacy or security risks that may be associated with use of online services.

If you agree to attend a telehealth consultative examination, we will tell you before the examination which video technology will be used for your examination. We will also provide instructions on how to access the technology. You may be asked to agree to third-party terms and privacy policies of the video technology provider. Neither this office nor SSA controls the terms of service or privacy policies of third-party video technology providers.

What You Need to Do Next

If You Decide to Attend In Person

If you do not want to attend a telehealth consultative examination, we will schedule a consultative examination in person.
