NASA's Ice, Cloud, and land Elevation Satellite-2 (ICESat-2) mission represents a remarkable advancement in our understanding of the Earth's changing climate and ecosystems since its launch in 2018. This sophisticated space-based laser altimeter continues to deliver critical observations on ice-sheet elevation changes, sea ice freeboard, and vegetation canopy height, thereby ensuring a seamless continuation of the groundbreaking work initiated by the original ICESat mission. Thanks to the innovative spirit and dedication of ICESat-2 scientists, a wealth of additional data products has been developed and is continuously expanding, encompassing vital areas such as inland surface water, ocean surface height, and bathymetry.

In the spirit of collaboration and community engagement, we invite you to take part in a brief, voluntary questionnaire that will take approximately 6-8 minutes of your time. Your insights will play a crucial role in assessing the diversity of our stakeholder community and identifying the myriad fields where ICESat-2 data can be applied. We want to assure you that any information you provide through this questionnaire will be handled with the utmost care and will be used exclusively by our dedicated Applications Team for internal purposes. Your privacy is our priority, and your insights will not be used for soliciting funds or other activities. Your participation is vital as we strive to foster an inclusive environment that enhances climate science and informs societal decision-making.
