This should be done every two years, rather than annually. The annual requirement is a burden on district employees in smaller school districts who don't have several assistants to piece things together. For us specifically, there is one person who is doing over 90% of the work on every CRDC required report.

Better yet, why not have a tiered structure, where those districts that have few issues annually (over, say, the past 3-5 CRDC admissions) go to a longer periods between required reporting?
