Review some career interests examples

Students and recent graduates will be asked to complete a career interests text field of no more than 100 words as part of the WRP application. Below are career interest statement examples. The goal of this field is to inform potential employers about current and future job interests and goals in 100 words or less.

Example 1 (Undergraduate)

As a college freshman pursuing an accounting degree, I am eager to explore how my skills match with opportunities in the federal service through a summer internship. I hope to contribute to the financial success of an agency and gain experience in bookkeeping, financial reporting, auditing or budget creation.

Example 2 (Recent Graduate)

I have a degree in civil engineering and am interested in working in engineering design, construction management, transportation, urban planning, or public policy. In school, I liked classes where I worked with a project team to design sustainable solutions to complex problems using math, research, and community input. I enjoy visiting project sites and watching my proposals and solutions being turned into real-world results. I take pride in seeing people and communities use the

I enjoy visiting project sites and watching my proposals and solutions being turned into real-world results. I take pride in seeing people and communities use the parks, buildings, and tunnels I helped to create.

Example 3 (Master's Degree) —

Looking for professional exposure with an MBA in Operations. I have proficiency in supply chain management and logistics management. In addition, I have strong communication, customer service, and presentation skills that would be an asset to a position in a federal agency. Ideally, I would like a position in supply chain management, but I am open to using skills acquired through my MBA in a human resources or equal employment opportunity role.
