Office of the Director

A message from the U.S. Census Bureau:

An interviewer will contact you soon to conduct your final interview for the Consumer Expenditure Survey. In this interview, as in the previous ones, we will ask about your household spending over the past three months.

With your help on this survey, we can measure things like inflation, which impacts wages, pensions, grocery costs, housing, and healthcare.

We recommend that you gather records of expenses, like receipts and bills, to help jog your memory. On the back of this letter are some examples of records that may help you during the interview.

To help shorten the interview it may be helpful to have some documents on hand.

We specifically want your help. Your participation is a service to your community and the country. Answering this survey is a great way to tell the government, businesses, and economists how you are doing in this economy. Your response will give a voice to hundreds of other U.S. households.

Your information is confidential and protected by law.

The information you give us is secure. We never share anything with law enforcement or other government agencies that can be traced back to you. Our state-of-the-art systems protect your data from cybersecurity risks. Our employees are trained on how to protect your data.

Thank you for your cooperation. We appreciate your help!

Gather these documents to help you report your expenses accurately

Most questions will ask about household expenses within the last 3 calendar months before your interview.
