 Analysis of change in burden:

The change in burden is due primarily to a revision in the methodology used to estimate the number of respondents and responses. Previously, the FDIC estimated responses using counts of web-based downloads of the associated forms. Under the revised methodology, the estimated number of annual respondents is based on the historical average number of submissions for the relevant forms, with conservative estimates applied where submission data were unavailable. Using this approach, the FDIC estimates 527 annual responses, an increase of 438 responses from the previously approved ICR. This increase reflects a methodological revision intended to improve the accuracy of the burden estimates rather than a change to the underlying information collection requirements.
