USCIS-2010-0014-0063	My E-Verify would be better if people knew about it. Right now, it's only something you'd ever learn about if you get a tentative non-confirmation in E-Verify and you want to know why. The worst part is that even if you are cleared in My E-Verify and it shows you have work authorization, your company cannot just take it, with your ID, and check for themselves in their own E-Verify system. A lot of people I know are cleared in My E-Verify so it's 100% certain they're legal to work, but they don't have all of their documents so companies cannot hire them. It's not my friends' fault, it's because USCIS is slow and even though the people I know applied for a new document over a year ago, they have not gotten a new one. If the government really wanted people to be able to work if they were legal to do so, it would allow companies to accept someone's ID (which proves their identity) and then a clear E-Verify response.	Response: USCIS determined the comment to be unrelated to the information collection.
