... Experts from the U.S. Government have estimated that as the capabilities of these models continue to improve, they will enable malicious actors to engage in activities that pose profound risks to U.S. National Security and foreign Policy objectives. As the Office of the Director of National Intelligence has assessed, AI models have the potential to enable advanced military and intelligence applications; lower the barriers to entry for non-experts to develop weapons of mass destruction (WMD); support powerful offensive cyber operations; and assist in human rights violations...

For example, a dual use AI model trained on data describing the functions and mechanics of chemical compounds or bacterial sequences could lower barriers to the development of chemical or biological weapons by providing products and foundational information that would enable non-experts to design and produce such weapons at a low cost... Homeland Security has
