

FOCUS GROUP

We would like to share this opportunity for individuals with current or recent experiences of poverty to participate in a focus group hosted by the American Institutes for Research (AIR) on behalf of the Children's Interagency Coordinating Council (CICC).

The 90-minute session is an opportunity for parents and caregivers to talk about the most pressing issues impacting families, share thoughts on gaps in benefits and services, and suggest ways to help reduce child poverty and promote well-being.

Interested individuals will participate in one online focus group with about seven other parents/caregivers to share experiences with poverty, insights, and ideas to reduce poverty to promote health and well-being.

Why Join?

Your voice and experience can make a difference. This focus group is a chance to help inform policies and practices that could positively impact families and children facing similar situations.

As a thank you, you'll receive $75 for your time.

Questions?

Email cicc@air.org

Who Can Join?

If you are a parent or caregiver who has recently (within the last 3 years) or is currently experiencing poverty — meaning there may not always be enough resources to meet basic needs — you're invited to participate.

We will select a date and time based on participant availability.

Use this link or the QR code to let us know you're interested! Respond by February 15th.

FOCUS GROUP

for young people

We'd like to share this opportunity for young people with current or recent experiences of poverty to participate in a focus group hosted by the American Institutes for Research (AIR) on behalf of the Children's Interagency Coordinating Council (CICC). The CICC was created by the government to help make sure that different groups that work with young people are doing their best to help. They focus on problems that affect young people's well-being, and they're collecting information to understand the main challenges young people are facing in achieving economic stability and improving their well-being.

The 90-minute session is a chance for young people to talk about the biggest problems they face in their daily lives to help the CICC understand how young people deal with achieving economic stability and improving their well-being.

Participants will engage in one online focus group with about seven other young people to share their experiences with poverty and opportunities to reduce poverty to promote health and well-being.

Why Join?

Your voice and experience can make a difference. Being involved may make a real positive change in local and national policies and practices for other young people facing similar situations.

As a thank you, you'll receive $75 for your time.

Who Can Join?

If you're 18-24 years old and have recently (within the last 3 years) or are currently experiencing poverty — meaning there may not always be enough resources to meet basic needs — you're invited to participate.

We will pick a date and time based on participants' availability.

Use this link or the QR code to let us know you're interested!
Respond by February 15th.

Questions?
Email cicc@air.org